

Orientation a school sensation

Once again Erindale College proved that the introduction of new blood, total chaos and pure enjoyment go hand in hand. This year's version of Orientation provided the first year students with a glimpse of how life should be enjoyed - to the hilt. Mass riots, excessive alcoholic indulgence and good clean fun were the order of the day. This year's theme was experiencing the "Orientation Sensation", and the three day event gave the students plenty of opportunity to catch the spirit.

The program began Thursday night. Lisa Greenwood devised the strategy. Andy Sloan (ECSU Social Director) directed the Frosh, and the Erindale Orientation contingent set an unofficial world record of 65 people piled onto one waterbed. Afterwards, it was discovered that three people were missing...ECSU has called in the coastguard.

The Scavenger Hunt on Thursday night uncovered a multitude of unusual items. Some of the more creative things brought into ECSU included an out house, a fire engine (which arrived seconds after the deadline), a used diaper, a squid, and to top it all off, a streaker. The night ended with a rousing rendition of college tunes around the campfire.

Friday was Roamaround on the downtown campus and the Erindale Frosh made their presence known. Mark Hammon (ECSU External Director) led the charge on the SAC office downtown, and painted the dome of the roof green. It was another first and it was memorable because we beat the Engineers to it and left our mark downtown. The Roamaround itself was wild and every pub echoed the chants of the Erindale Frosh who seemed to be everywhere. (The Engineers were nowhere to be found!)

Saturday was competition day - Monster Ball contests, obstacle course, soccer (everyone plastered in mud), ECSU president Tim Van Wart, looked like he was trying out for the movie Apocalypse Now and could not be recognized.

Then came the infamous Pajama Pub on Saturday night. The pub was alive with Frosh and everyone was wearing their midnight "specials". It also marked the First Annual Erindale "Kiss Off" contest. ECSU executive Tim Van Wart, Chad McCleave, and Joe Raftis were designated as judges. "It's a TOUGH job but someone has to do it!" It was a top notch competition and the women in the finals were all winners. But when it came time to choose a winner, Ginette MacDonald was voted as having "The Hottest Lips on Campus". It should be noted that it took the judges a great deal of time to decide - which says something about the calibre of the contestants or the scruples of the judges.

The Engineers were no longer under the dome as Erindale's Orientation contingent invaded the SAC offices last week. The herd of blue shirts created total chaos downtown in an attempt to prove who really had the school spirit.

Career Planning: Not Too Early To Start

By EVELYN PALEY

First year is not too early to start "thinking about" and "exploring" future career possibilities. Take control of your life and as well as educating yourself in an academic sense, take time out to visit the Career Counselling .. Placement

Centre on campus (Room 3094, South Building) to set your career future in motion. How can one really come to terms with what one wants to do without the information on which to base a decision? How can one really gain an insight into what the world out there is

"really" like without taking time to delve below the surface? And this all takes time!! Don't wait till your graduating year. Avoid the panic syndrome and start now! We all receive continual messages from peers, family, friends and the like about what "they" think we should do, and this is usually based on their interests and value systems. If we're not getting suggestions, we're getting questions. "Well, what are you going to do when you graduate?" All these messages usually serve to confuse and baffle us and we often end up immobilized in the field wondering which way to go and putting the issue off till another day.

It is the path of least resistance to float through the system just taking what comes your way. We call this the "grocery store mentality." We just pick from what happens to be there in front of us instead of delving into the vast range of possibilities that aren't staring us in the face.

Your best friend may be searching for a sales career in the investment industry because he/she is looking for high income potential, the fast paced atmosphere of big business and possesses a personality that craves the challenge and ignores the insecurity of commission sales. He/she is a unique individual who possesses unique personality traits, values, skills and interests. What might be right for him/her might not be right for you. As a first step to taking control of your life then:

Step 1: Take stock of your own unique set of personality traits, values, interests and skills.

Think of your life in perhaps 3 year segments and reflect back on what you have done in school, work settings and in your spare time. What were the highlights? Think about those times when you felt that sense of accomplishment or achievement. Think of all those activities you enjoyed and think about why. What did you learn from the involvements you did have and what skills and abilities did you develop. Conversely think of those aspects you didn't enjoy and why. This exercise of self assessment should be a continual process as you face new experiences, challenges and opportunities in life.

Step 2: Investigate work environments that could potentially make use of your unique package of values, interests and skills. Brainstorm with friends, family or perhaps a career counsellor to come up with suggestions. Once your initial list is drawn up, make use of every information source available to glean further information about possible careers and jobs available in various work environments and in particular types of organizations. Your Career Counselling & Placement Centre at Erindale is a good starting point and offers the following resources among others.

Career Information Binders: A set of 100 information binders on a vast range of career possibilities within the Arts, Business, the Trades, Medicine & Health, Social Services, Travel, Recreation ... etc.

Sample Jobs Binders: A sampling of typical jobs that have been advertised in the past for graduates from particular course backgrounds and interested in particular work environments.

e.g. If you academic background is the social sciences, commerce or biology, etc., you can view what kind of jobs have been advertised asking for those course backgrounds.

If you are interested in job opportunities in banking, investment, research and lab careers or the social sciences, etc., you can peruse examples of positions advertised in those work environments.

The Sample Job Binders cover both permanent and summer job possibilities.

Rubik's Cubic Confusion

By GARTHE HARDIE

Most people interested in games like Scrabble, Chess, Risk and puzzles which require the use of abstract problem-solving techniques, will probably have heard about the Rubik's Cube, which rose to the zenith of popularity in Toronto this summer.

The cube consists of twenty-six small cubes assembled around a universal joint. This allows the six faces of the cube to rotate. Each of the six faces has a colour. Turning the faces rearranges the colours and the puzzle is solved when each of the six faces has only one colour.

The cube was invented by Eno Rubik, a Hungarian architect who thought it an excellent way to help his students understand three dimensional spatial relationships. The cube was also made in Japan (as is everything else) by Terutoshi Ishe, an engineer. (I guess a "Terutoshi Ishe Cube" is a bit of a mouthful.) The cube has been popular in Europe for some time but North America has just caught on.

Just in case you think the puzzle is simple, Permutation experts tell me that there are some  $4.3 \times 10^{19}$  possible arrangements of the colours. Because there are so many possible arrangements an algorithmic approach to solving the problem is clearly useless. According to Murphy's Law the correct solution would be the last one you would find. Instead of trying all the possible combinations (the algorithmic approach) the heuristic approach is more fruitful. This way we employ strategies to maximize the probability of being correct and to minimize the time and effort spent in the solution.

There are several ways to solve the problem. Taking the cube apart and putting it back together correctly does not count. Neither does tearing the coloured paper from the cubes. I will not give a solution here but I will challenge the intellectuals to come up with a solution that takes no longer than five minutes.

The Phantom Strikes Again

Over the summer, vandals had their share of success on Erindale Campus which finally escalated into two major events. The Grand Duchy of McGillia, as it is so fondly called by its residents, was broken into. The patrons of the place tend to feel that it was the work of an on-campus operator as the only thing stolen was four cases of beer.

On a more serious nature the pin-ball machines in the North

Building were picked and the money removed. Security was very minimal during the summer and this more than anything else led to the execution of the daring plot. E.C.S.U. President Tim Van Wart reported that the amount stolen was virtually negligible due to the fact that few people visited the place during the summer period.

Your University- and welcome to it

Once again, as scheduled, September has arrived and once again, as scheduled, another school year has begun. Many are the individuals who have come to this wonderland in order to attain a degree of some sort, for regardless of what you may have heard the main reason why most students are here is to obtain a diploma with their name on it. That point may very well have gone unnoticed during the activities of the past week but sooner or later we must all come face to face with essay deadlines, term tests, and other such nonsense, the purpose of which is to determine whether or not you will receive that sought-after piece of paper with your name on it.

We hope we haven't disturbed you by mentioning such unpleasant matters but the fact that there is work to be done is often forgotten over the course of the summer. Knowing the truth, there may now be some of you who wish to terminate their association with this institution. Those people are directed to go immediately to the Registrar's Office where they can ask for a refund.

Now that we've gotten rid of the riffraff, there is some good news for those of you who are still with us. Those assignments we mentioned aren't really all that much of a problem. They may be a bit of a nuisance at times, perhaps even interfering with other more important events every once in a while and forcing you to stay home one or two nights during a term, but if you put your mind to it you should be able to surpass those obstacles and become a Bachelor of something or another.

Now there is some better news for you. Although most students may come here to receive a degree, that is definitely not the only reason students come here. There are many other events occurring all about you during your stay here and it is important that you participate in these "events". There are clubs of all shapes and sizes that not only let you learn about all sorts of things, without even paying tuition, but will introduce you to new people who may open doors for you that you never dreamed existed. There are opportunities for you to fall flat on your face, having miscalculated your progress or fallen prone to bad luck.

Now we have the best news of all for you. These two previous aspects of your university experience that we have mentioned are not at all separate from each other. They are part of the same thing, part of your preparation to enter that real world. You will have faced many challenges during your visit here, or will at least have had the opportunity to. You will have conquered some of them and been conquered by others. But you will be ready to face the real world. And with this readiness, who knows what will happen when you meet it? That's a question only you can answer.

And your paper

Excuse us for having been so rude but we forgot to introduce ourselves to you. The name of the paper is Medium II and it is published once a week throughout the winter session by students at Erindale College. We don't have any specific purpose, or if we do we're certainly not aware of it but we do try to inform and/or entertain. Of course we're not always successful but we give it our best shot and considering most of the people who put this paper out are full-time students, we, with all modesty possible, think we do a fair job.

This editorial is the last piece of paper being written and looking over what we've put together we can see some of our work isn't perfect but that won't stop us from putting out an issue again next week. We'll persevere and maybe some day we'll get it right.

If you'd like to join us and help put this paper out then by all means do so. We're located in the Margeson Hut, by the Bank of Commerce. You can try us through the week but there may be no one in at the time. If so, and you're eager, then drop by Monday since there's someone here pretty well the whole day and then some. We'll tell you more about the paper and you just might find you won't be able to leave. Then again, you might decide we're a bunch of idiots and leave immediately. Whatever the case, you should at least give us a try.

Tuesday, September 22

12 noon

A meeting will be held in the Margeson Hut for all those interested in joining the staff of Medium II.

ECSU Audit

Last year, the Erindale College Student Union operated at a deficit of $19,934.00 according to the auditors' report released over the summer. Reasons for the overdraw are clouded and unsure, but on close examination one can see that bank loans and accrued interest liability for the last fiscal year formed the major chunk of the deficit.

Chad McCleave, E.C.S.U. Vice-President in charge of Finance has decided that this government would pursue the task of drastically cutting back on expenses in an attempt to lower the deficit for the coming year. As a result, all clubs and social events will be operating on a much lower budget than last year.

Turner Heats up Movie

By CATHERINE MURACK
BODY HEAT, the new movie written and directed by Lawrence Kasdan has been playing at the Imperial Six in Toronto for the last two weeks. Considering it is the only theatre in Toronto showing the film, one automatically expects long lineups for the evening show. The lineup was definitely long and other than being in a theatre where you begin to feel as if you are in the bleachers, your expectations still run high.

The movie has been presented as a highly sensual film but ends up falling short of even being an enjoyable film. The heat which is an important part of the film becomes so repetitious and oppressive that the audience begins to find it absurd. Every character in the film is so concerned with the heat and never fails to mention it, even though the audience visually sees the heat in shirts drenched at the back, hair sticking to the body, perspiration visible everywhere and sweat glistening from the bodies. Granted the sweat does add to the erotic elements of the film but the audience begins to tire of the continuous mention of the temperature.

The plot though familiar is interesting. Ned Racine, played by William Hurt, is a small-time lawyer who meets a beautiful, rich, sexy woman, Matty Walker (Kathleen Turner) at a park one evening. Even though Matty Walker is married, she is unhappy and repressed, and after seeing Ned Racine's interest in her, you are quite prepared for the next encounter.

Admittedly she does have a way with words, enough to spark the interest of any male. After William Hurt spills a cold drink over the front of her dress by accident and volunteers to get something to wipe it, her sensual comment 'You don't want to lick it?', could awaken any man's interest. Ned and Matty become involved in a pretty steamy relationship which is fairly easy since the husband is away from home quite often. Sounds familiar? Well, it becomes more typical when the two lovers decide to kill the rich old husband, Edmund, so they could live in the lap of luxury fulfilling every pleasure. Ned Racine, being a lawyer, plans and executes an almost perfect murder but as always something goes wrong. Questions begin to arise as to the apparent accidental death of Edmund Walker and one of Ned's best friends, a cop, is doing the investigating. The plot may be one of old but there is that flickering suspicion that something is not right, that keeps the audience wondering what will occur.

The witty, tight dialogue is a plus, the preparations for the murder interesting, the outcome surprising. It becomes apparent that a man's physical needs can cloud his judgement as to what exactly a woman is offering. Matty Walker may be one sexy woman but she knows exactly how to play her game.

With a plot interestingly placed in this view, the audience might be disappointed by the acting. William Hurt does a fine job as a cool, small time lawyer who is a pushover for the rich lady's sexy body but at times you wonder if the only thing he succeeds at is in bedding this woman. But does he really succeed at that? The audience finally sees him come to life at the end of the film, a little late but at least it's there.

Newcomer Kathleen Turner excellently portrays the sexy, alluring rich lady. Her acting leaves a little to be desired as you wonder if she is ever honest at all. She seems removed from her character at times and it shows. It helps her to appear aloof, but even too much aloof can turn sour.

Richard Crenna who portrays Edmund Walker, the rich but older man, has a fine performance. The audience is never quite sure how much he knows about his wife's activities and where he stands.

But personally, the most enjoyable performance was that of Ted Damsen, who plays another lawyer who is Ned Racine's closest friend. His concern for his friend is not overplayed, just the right amount to draw you to him. The humor and lightness involved is enjoyable especially in a film so oppressed to heat and passion.

Lawrence Kasdan, who was involved in "The Empire Strikes Back" and the summer blockbuster "Raiders of the Lost Ark", undertakes his first stab at directing in this film. He has the taste to combine the setting with the perfect background sounds. The tinkling of the chimes outside Matty Walker's bedroom becomes familiar but always a bit eerie. Kasdan has the right feel but carries certain elements such as the heat and the passion, a bit too far so that they lose their appeal.

"Body Heat" is quite a picture. It has its good moment but it also has its bad moments and so the overall impression is not too favorable. The actors are fine but when locked into limited characters, you cannot expect better. Maybe the problem is that in telling his story, Kasdan let those elements which should be hinted at, become too major.

The film does entertain in its own way but it is only the finale that leaves an impression. Any chauvinist who believes a woman does not have brains should go see the movie. If nothing else, Kathleen Turner proves that while a man is overcome by his physical needs, the woman can manipulate him into any situation, and still come away clean. Hopefully William Hurt learns that a pretty package can hold more than you bargained for inside.

The Back Doors

By CATHERINE SISSMORE
It has been said that imitation is one of the sincerest forms of flattery. If this maxim possesses one iota of validity, the late Jim Morrison surely must be overjoyed that ten years after his demise his messages are still being communicated to an ever increasing number of acolytes.

If a reliable reproduction of 'The Doors' is to be had, there are several criteria to be met beforehand. The main area of concern is the successful reproduction of the "Morrison mystique."

Friday night the Campus Centre hosted "The Back Doors", a five man band from Pennsylvania. Their claim to fame is their repertoire of Doors music.

I felt it quite unnerving during the performance that the ersatz "lizard king" looked nothing like the unbalanced Morrison, yet possessed many of his unique mannerisms and gesticulations.

During the more upbeat Doors tunes, the accuracy of the reproduction attained subliminal heights. The musicianship of the "Back Doors" was tight and they (fortunately) did not try to "improve" what The Doors had written; this was refreshing.

Another criterion required is a successful reproduction of the actual music itself. The Back Doors performed excellent renditions of "People are Strange", "Touch Me", "Run With Me", "Love You Two Times" and some of the other more popular Doors' songs. The band seemed to have difficulty attracting the audience's attention when trying to play the less known Doors' tunes.

Despite these minor drawbacks, I feel the Back Doors were a success. The audience seemed to enjoy their performance.

The Back Doors reproduced to the best of their ability but it is an impossibility to imitate a true artist.

Hughes Unoriginal

By PETER STASIEROWSKI

One would expect that with friends such as John Foxx and Billy Currie of Ultravox, and Marc Knopfler of Dire Straights, some of their musical madness would rub off. Such would seem to be the case with Geoff Hughes, a musician 'extraordinaire' and very unorthodox. His debut album is evidence of this man's musical creativity and ingenuity.

Most have already heard of Hughes' single "Happy Birthday Kid" as it slowly works its way up the record charts. The lyrics may indeed sound melancholy and moronic but the music adequately provides a form of stability and as such - musical entertainment.

There are three other tunes on the album that merit some airplay. "Got to Have You" is a rocking tune that provides rhythmic continuity. In fact, where "Happy Birthday Kid" tends to remind one of Dire Straits, "Got to Have You" portrays the influence of Ultravox.

"Sinbad" and "Feel Like Changing" provide the listeners with two more musical varieties of Hughes' talent. His voice dominates the tunes and he exploits it to good advantage. There is a quality about it that attracts the listener - the voice is pleasant to the ear and yet mysterious.

Overall though, my first impression of this album is that Chris de Burgh had something to do with it. Although not as folk oriented, the lyrics and vocal harmonization are similar. Geoff Hughes, if his first album is any indication, has a brilliant and creative musical future ahead of him. Let's hope that this just wasn't a one shot deal. Happy Birthday Geoff with your first album and may your second be just as memorable.

Our Wide World of Sports

This fall the Erindale Athletic department is offering a wide range of activities for students. From the competitive small college football league to the instructional courses in yoga there is a program to suit your capabilities and interest. Erindale athletics offers two levels of competition in most sports. These include the inter-Collegiate or Interfaculty teams and intra-mural squads.

The intercollegiate and interfaculty teams require a high degree of commitment from the players. However, this high level of competition is available for those who are interested in developing athletic skills to complement their educational studies.

Intramurals are strictly for fun with the only prerequisite to participate being enthusiasm. The competition becomes fierce at times. The 22 teams involved in last year's floor hockey league is evidence of the potential for intramural activities at the college. There are also clubs and instructional classes listed below for those who wish to pursue activities in their spare time.

GENERAL INFORMATION ABOUT THE ATHLETIC FACILITIES

The Athletic office is in Room 1114 in the South Building (next to the bookstore) and is open weekdays from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. The facilities are located one floor below and are open until 9 p.m.

Students may purchase athletic lockers and towel service at a charge of $13.00. Three hour lockers are also available for 25 cents. The activity equipment will be available in exchange for student I.D. cards. Racquets and 10-speed bikes may be rented for a small fee.

SQUASH

Erindale has three squash courts located beside the weight room on level 1 in the South building. Squash court reservations must be made at the "Den", Room 0116, up to 48 hours in advance. There is a squash ladder for those wishing to upgrade competition.

EXCELLENCE TEAMS (INTER-COLLEGIATE)

ROWING - MEN AND WOMEN

Did you ever want to be good at a sport but couldn't seem to find the right one? Perhaps rowing is your thing. Rowing out of the Don Rowing Club, the men's and women's teams compete against other Universities in Ontario, in novice, junior varsity, and varsity categories. The coaches make sure all who come out will compete so everyone is welcome. (Some conditioning would be helpful.) A high degree of commitment is expected on this team as practices are Monday to Friday mornings with regattas on Saturdays. Sign up in the Athletic Office. Practices start the first week in September.

FOOTBALL

Were you on a high school football team? If so, we are looking for you. This will be our fifth and most successful season in the small college league but we need several first year players to maintain the balance of youth and experience which the team depends on. If you're interested leave your name at the Athletic office.

CROSS COUNTRY

This will be the fourth season for the Erindale men's and women's cross country team. A successful second year saw our athletes compete in both University and College meets as well as road races and our own annual cross country meet. If you run and are interested in the opportunity to compete against serious runners or would like to join in friendly competition, this team is for you. Leave your name at the Athletic office and start training now.

MEN'S TEAMS

INTERFACULTY BASKETBALL

The men's interfaculty basketball team is designed for those students who wish to play at a level above intramural. Next year we're looking forward to having an outstanding team but new members are needed to replace the graduates. Practices will start in early October. There are no more than two practices a week and after games start, one game and one practice a week. The season is from November to March.

VOLLEYBALL

Traditionally, the men's volleyball team has had several excellent players; however, it has lacked the depth provided by new members. Consequently the team makes the playoffs but hasn't had that extra team effort needed to win. Practices are weekly plus games and the season begins Wednesday, September 17 from six to eight in the gym.

SOCCER

The men's soccer beat Scarborough in the finals winning their second inter-faculty soccer championship. Rookies are welcome! First practice on the field 5:00 p.m. Wednesday, September 16.

LACROSSE

The Erindale Warriors Lacrosse team has been victorious for the past five years, winning the Dafoe Cup in 1979-80 for the seventh time in the past ten years. The team may be hard pressed to continue its impressive record as graduation has claimed almost half of last year's players.

Practice begins late September; sign up early in the athletic office.

ICE HOCKEY

Our men's interfaculty hockey team is for players who are interested in high level competitive hockey and who are willing to commit themselves to an exhibition schedule as well as league games. The team has made the playoffs for the past five years and the coaching staff this year is eager to see the team go all the way. As several members of the team have graduated, prospective players are encouraged to leave their names in the Athletic office. Season starts September 22 with meeting at 4:30 in Room 1114.

WOMEN'S TEAM INTERFACULTY FIELD HOCKEY

The women's field hockey team begins its season in September. The team, named the Hustlers, plays in the inter-faculty league in which they have been in the playoffs for the last six years and were champions in 1977. This year the team is planning an expanded schedule with travel to local universities to play Varsity B teams. No experience is necessary, just a desire to play, and the dedication to work hard. Practices and interfaculty games are early in the morning so as not to conflict with classes or study time.

BASKETBALL

Did you play basketball in high school? Women's basketball at Erindale enjoyed a resurgence last year which saw the Hustlers reach the playoffs. As the team is expected from the squad this year. However, women are needed to complete the roster. First date is meeting at Room 1114 September 17 at 12:00.

VOLLEYBALL

Last year the Hustlers had one of the best teams in the league, enjoying an undefeated season until they were upset in the playoffs. This year they hope to go all the way. Rookies are needed to fill out the squad. Practices begin on Thursday, September 17. Check at Room 1114.

ICE HOCKEY

Women's Ice Hockey at Erindale has become one of the favorite past-times for female students. Experience is not an essential prerequisite but a willingness to learn and honest dedication is imperative. Practices are usually once a week with one game a week during the regular season. Transportation is available to all. Practices and games and all notices are posted on the bulletin board outside the athletic office. In addition to league play, Erindale hosts its own invitational tournament which provides excellent competition and lots of fun! So if you are interested in supplementing your academic year training with some invigorating and enjoyable activity, contact Room 1114, Athletic office.

Season Opener Stalled

By F.J. ABLENAS

The Erindale Warriors' men's football club opens their fifth season in the Ontario Small College's Football League this year amid clouds of uncertainty. With school starting a week later in the summer than usual this year and problems getting in touch with players during the postal strike, a late training camp resulted. The consequence of this was the cancellation of the September 6 exhibition game against the Wilfred Laurier junior varsity team and the postponement of the Saturday, August 19 home opener against Sheridan College until the end of the season.

With only eighteen players in camp two weeks after the original August 31 training camp opening, both Athletics Director Bob Ryckman and coach Clare Exelby express uncertainty about the future of Varsity football at Erindale. "We provide players with the opportunity," states Ryckman, "but we can't put on the pads for them. It's up to the students to accept or reject the program."

Coach Exelby is more philosophical. "When only 0.25 percent of the students show up for the first week of camp," muses the skipper, "maybe students aren't interested in football." This occurs despite the fact that Exelby feels Mississauga is one of the best football towns in the Toronto area.

When the season finally gets underway, the Warriors will be a new look team, with few returning veterans. However, Jerry Power, Sean Hayes, Ed Kwan, Terry Del Bosco, Steve Shimano and Pete Doublard will return to the green-white-and-black. Third year veteran Tim Power also returns as the leading candidate for quarterback.

While Ryckman feels that the recruiting program at local high schools has yet to pay dividends, there are a few young prospects out with the team already. Defensive backs Al Missen and Brian Gehagen have looked strong, in addition to lineman Jeff Smith. The coaching staff has yet to see what types of players will turn out during the first week of classes. When asked how he felt about the low numbers that forced the postponement of the opener, coach Exelby offered, "Maybe we're at the lowest point you can be at right now," insinuating things had to get better. Tune in two weeks from now and find out.

Quarter points: Warriors now open at home on September 26 against defending champions Seneca Braves. At press time an exhibition game against Scarborough for September 19 is uncertain.

ECARA Elections Borcsok Appointed President

Due to the resignation of ECARA (Erindale College Athletic and Recreation Association) president Cindy Wegg, Mike Borcsok was appointed the new 1981-82 president at the council's first fall term meeting. Mike served last year as the Sports Editor for the MEDIUM II, and is hopeful that his knowledge of the sports scene at the college will assist his fellow council members to implement a successful program in the upcoming year.

By-Election Next Week

Since Cindy Wegg was also the women's Inter-faculty downtown representative, a by-election for this vacancy will be held on Monday, September 21. Nominations for this vacancy are open until 5 p.m. Friday, September 18, 1981. For further information concerning the election please contact the Athletic office (Room 1114).
